

THE LOUISVILLE DAILY JOURNAL.

VOLUME XLIV.

LOUISVILLE JOURNAL
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY PRENTICE, HENDERSON, & OSBO.

JOURNAL OFFICE, BUILDING,
Green street, between Third and Fourth.

— Daily Journal, delivered in the city, $10.00

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION BY MAIL:

$1.00
$1.00 per month.

25¢ weekly per year.

Weekly per year.

10¢ monthly in chancery each.

All subscriptions out of the city discounted at the rate of 25¢.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING:

One Square, Ten Lines AGATE or LESS, DAILY:

25¢ insertion, 1 1/2 month, $7.00 1 month, $8.00

2 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $12.00 2 months, $9.00

3 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $15.00 6 months, $18.00

4 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $20.00 12 months, $30.00

5 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $25.00 18 months, $40.00

6 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $30.00 24 months, $45.00

7 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $35.00 30 months, $50.00

8 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $40.00 36 months, $55.00

9 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $45.00 42 months, $60.00

10 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $50.00 48 months, $65.00

11 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $55.00 54 months, $70.00

12 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $60.00 60 months, $75.00

13 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $65.00 66 months, $80.00

14 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $70.00 72 months, $85.00

15 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $75.00 78 months, $90.00

16 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $80.00 84 months, $95.00

17 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $85.00 90 months, $100.00

18 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $90.00 96 months, $105.00

19 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $95.00 102 months, $110.00

20 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $100.00 108 months, $115.00

21 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $105.00 114 months, $120.00

22 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $110.00 120 months, $125.00

23 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $115.00 126 months, $130.00

24 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $120.00 132 months, $135.00

25 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $125.00 138 months, $140.00

26 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $130.00 144 months, $145.00

27 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $135.00 150 months, $150.00

28 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $140.00 156 months, $155.00

29 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $145.00 162 months, $160.00

30 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $150.00 168 months, $165.00

31 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $155.00 174 months, $170.00

32 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $160.00 180 months, $175.00

33 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $165.00 186 months, $180.00

34 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $170.00 192 months, $185.00

35 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $175.00 198 months, $190.00

36 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $180.00 204 months, $195.00

37 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $185.00 210 months, $200.00

38 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $190.00 216 months, $205.00

39 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $195.00 222 months, $210.00

40 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $200.00 228 months, $215.00

41 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $205.00 234 months, $220.00

42 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $210.00 240 months, $225.00

43 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $215.00 246 months, $230.00

44 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $220.00 252 months, $235.00

45 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $225.00 258 months, $240.00

46 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $230.00 264 months, $245.00

47 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $235.00 270 months, $250.00

48 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $240.00 276 months, $255.00

49 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $245.00 282 months, $260.00

50 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $250.00 288 months, $265.00

51 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $255.00 294 months, $270.00

52 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $260.00 300 months, $275.00

53 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $265.00 306 months, $280.00

54 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $270.00 312 months, $285.00

55 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $275.00 318 months, $290.00

56 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $280.00 324 months, $295.00

57 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $285.00 330 months, $300.00

58 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $290.00 336 months, $305.00

59 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $295.00 342 months, $310.00

60 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $300.00 348 months, $315.00

61 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $305.00 354 months, $320.00

62 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $310.00 360 months, $325.00

63 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $315.00 366 months, $330.00

64 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $320.00 372 months, $335.00

65 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $325.00 378 months, $340.00

66 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $330.00 384 months, $345.00

67 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $335.00 390 months, $350.00

68 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $340.00 396 months, $355.00

69 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $345.00 402 months, $360.00

70 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $350.00 408 months, $365.00

71 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $355.00 414 months, $370.00

72 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $360.00 420 months, $375.00

73 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $365.00 426 months, $380.00

74 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $370.00 432 months, $385.00

75 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $375.00 438 months, $390.00

76 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $380.00 444 months, $395.00

77 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $385.00 450 months, $400.00

78 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $390.00 456 months, $405.00

79 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $395.00 462 months, $410.00

80 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $400.00 468 months, $415.00

81 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $405.00 474 months, $420.00

82 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $410.00 480 months, $425.00

83 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $415.00 486 months, $430.00

84 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $420.00 492 months, $435.00

85 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $425.00 498 months, $440.00

86 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $430.00 504 months, $445.00

87 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $435.00 510 months, $450.00

88 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $440.00 516 months, $455.00

89 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $445.00 522 months, $460.00

90 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $450.00 528 months, $465.00

91 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $455.00 534 months, $470.00

92 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $460.00 540 months, $475.00

93 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $465.00 546 months, $480.00

94 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $470.00 552 months, $485.00

95 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $475.00 558 months, $490.00

96 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $480.00 564 months, $495.00

97 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $485.00 570 months, $500.00

98 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $490.00 576 months, $505.00

99 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $495.00 582 months, $510.00

100 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $500.00 588 months, $515.00

101 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $505.00 594 months, $520.00

102 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $510.00 600 months, $525.00

103 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $515.00 606 months, $530.00

104 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $520.00 612 months, $535.00

105 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $525.00 618 months, $540.00

106 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $530.00 624 months, $545.00

107 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $535.00 630 months, $550.00

108 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $540.00 636 months, $555.00

109 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $545.00 642 months, $560.00

110 insertions, 1 1/2 month, $550.00 648 months, $565.00

LOUISVILLE JOURNAL

EDITED AND PUBLISHED BY PRENTICE, HENDERSON, & OSBORNE.

Green Street, between Third and Fourth.

NOTICE TO THE MAIL-SUBSCRIBERS.

The name of the subscriber is printed after the name on each paper, and thus every day readers can see who is the author of what they subscribe. Truly attending to this will save those dozens of renewals will prevent much annoyance.

GEORGE D. PRENTICE, & CO., Editors.

PAUL R. SHIPMAN, & CO., Editors.

THURSDAY, OCT. 29, 1863.

FROM SHERMAN'S ADVANCE.—A letter from Corinth, Miss., states that the entire 15th army corps, under Major-General Sherman, and one division of McPherson's 17th corps, had passed through there and advanced as far as Tuscaloosa, without meeting any material opposition. The Mobile and Ohio road will soon be opened from Columbus to Corinth, and thence to Chattanooga with all possible despatch.

An expedition sent out in the direction of Holly Springs, consisting of the 7th Kansas and 3d Michigan cavalry, with other regiments, met the enemy in the vicinity of that place, where they had a severe engagement. The loss of the 7th Kansas was three killed and nine wounded, and the rebels' regiments suffered in about the same proportion. The rebels lost nine killed on the field and three were captured. The Mobile and Ohio road will be opened from Columbus to Corinth, and thence to Chattanooga with all possible despatch.

The present war has fully developed the necessity for a more general military education. Not only is it essential in meeting the demands of the war, but it will be necessary for generations to come. The diffusion of military information can never be lost upon a people, and when their character and associations make it a popular as well as important course of instruction, it is eligible to overlook its advantages. Our system of volunteer armies, upon which we have thus far relied, and upon which we will undoubtedly rely in the future, absolutely demands that steps should be taken to prepare our youth for what may at any moment become of their profession. Our army is composed of the best material in the world; most of our officers are such as by their general education and intelligence would compare favorably with any class of gentlemen in the world; but yet, at this time, we have lacked knowledge of the rudiments of the military art. This has been the great stumbling-block. Our officers and our soldiers have been eager to learn, but they have had to learn together. The soldier, instead of looking to his officer as his instructor, has regarded him as his fellow-student. The fundamental principle of all subordination—a principle which lies at the very root of that courage-inspiring confidence which teaches the soldier in the hour of need to leap upon the judgment of his commander and thereby effects that unanimity of action which will insure success—is that habit of looking up to his officer as his superior in intelligence and information, as well as in military rank, which characterizes the old soldier's attitude toward an educated and intelligent officer. The importance of preparation among officers, and of respect for it among soldiers is so manifest that attention need only be called to it to impress upon every reasoning mind its magnitude.

Should the present war unhappy last a few years longer a new generation will grow up and will be called upon to fill the ranks of the army. From the rising generation will come the subalterns to whom in their limited spheres is to be entrusted the instruction and discipline of the fragments which go to make up the efficient whole. It will take but a very few years to develop this new generation of men. Manhood comes on spaces in times of war, and, even at this very time, many a young soldier undergoing the rough experience of war had hardly left his mother's side when Sumter and Bull Run astounded his boyish faculties.

Suppose that, as is the earnest hope of every true patriot, the war should close sooner, in a few months, and that then, after a respite of five or ten years, a foreign war should open upon us. The subordinate officers of the army which we would then have to call into existence would be drawn from the generation now thumbing its spelling books. With the experience of this war before us, should we not provide for such exigencies of the future? As these present boys and future officers relinquished their civil pursuits to take up the sword for the defense of their country's honor, would they not thank the older generation which had with such fore-thought prepared them for their new positions, and enabled them to enter with confidence upon their novel duties, and to command the respect of their inferiors?

When our armies are disbanded we are bound to keep alive the military spirit which now pervades us. Even the universal peace societies will protest against our relapsing into our old ridiculous military system. State military organizations will have to be established, but we must not let the information which is to sustain them upon a respectable footing die out with the generation which participated in the present war and learned all they knew from slow and rough experience. We are called upon to do something for those who are to follow us, and that something is the establishment of military schools. West Point may suffice to supply the standing army, but, even at this very time, many a young soldier undergoing the rough experience of war had hardly left his mother's side when Sumter and Bull Run astounded his boyish faculties.

Suppose that, as is the earnest hope of every true patriot, the war should close sooner, in a few months, and that then, after a respite of five or ten years, a foreign war should open upon us. The subordinate officers of the army which we would then have to call into existence would be drawn from the generation now thumbing its spelling books.

With the experience of this war before us, should we not provide for such exigencies of the future?

As these present boys and future officers relinquished their civil pursuits to take up the sword for the defense of their country's honor, would they not thank the older generation which had with such fore-thought prepared them for their new positions, and enabled them to enter with confidence upon their novel duties, and to command the respect of their inferiors?

When our armies are disbanded we are bound to keep alive the military spirit which now pervades us. Even the universal peace societies will protest against our relapsing into our old ridiculous military system.

State military organizations will have to be established, but we must not let the information which is to sustain them upon a respectable footing die out with the generation which participated in the present war and learned all they knew from slow and rough experience.

We are called upon to do something for those who are to follow us, and that something is the establishment of military schools. West Point may suffice to supply the standing army, but, even at this very time, many a young soldier undergoing the rough experience of war had hardly left his mother's side when Sumter and Bull Run astounded his boyish faculties.

Suppose that, as is the earnest hope of every true patriot, the war should close sooner, in a few months, and that then, after a respite of five or ten years, a foreign war should open upon us. The subordinate officers of the army which we would then have to call into existence would be drawn from the generation now thumbing its spelling books.

With the experience of this war before us, should we not provide for such exigencies of the future?

As these present boys and future officers relinquished their civil pursuits to take up the sword for the defense of their country's honor, would they not thank the older generation which had with such fore-thought prepared them for their new positions, and enabled them to enter with confidence upon their novel duties, and to command the respect of their inferiors?

When our armies are disbanded we are bound to keep alive the military spirit which now pervades us. Even the universal peace societies will protest against our relapsing into our old ridiculous military system.

State military organizations will have to be established, but we must not let the information which is to sustain them upon a respectable footing die out with the generation which participated in the present war and learned all they knew from slow and rough experience.

We are called upon to do something for those who are to follow us, and that something is the establishment of military schools. West Point may suffice to supply the standing army, but, even at this very time, many a young soldier undergoing the rough experience of war had hardly left his mother's side when Sumter and Bull Run astounded his boyish faculties.

Suppose that, as is the earnest hope of every true patriot, the war should close sooner, in a few months, and that then, after a respite of five or ten years, a foreign war should open upon us. The subordinate officers of the army which we would then have to call into existence would be drawn from the generation now thumbing its spelling books.

With the experience of this war before us, should we not provide for such exigencies of the future?

As these present boys and future officers relinquished their civil pursuits to take up the sword for the defense of their country's honor, would they not thank the older generation which had with such fore-thought prepared them for their new positions, and enabled them to enter with confidence upon their novel duties, and to command the respect of their inferiors?

When our armies are disbanded we are bound to keep alive the military spirit which now pervades us. Even the universal peace societies will protest against our relapsing into our old ridiculous military system.

State military organizations will have to be established, but we must not let the information which is to sustain them upon a respectable footing die out with the generation which participated in the present war and learned all they knew from slow and rough experience.

We are called upon to do something for those who are to follow us, and that something is the establishment of military schools. West Point may suffice to supply the standing army, but, even at this very time, many a young soldier undergoing the rough experience of war had hardly left his mother's side when Sumter and Bull Run astounded his boyish faculties.

Suppose that, as is the earnest hope of every true patriot, the war should close sooner, in a few months, and that then, after a respite of five or ten years, a foreign war should open upon us. The subordinate officers of the army which we would then have to call into existence would be drawn from the generation now thumbing its spelling books.

With the experience of this war before us, should we not provide for such exigencies of the future?

As these present boys and future officers relinquished their civil pursuits to take up the sword for the defense of their country's honor, would they not thank the older generation which had with such fore-thought prepared them for their new positions, and enabled them to enter with confidence upon their novel duties, and to command the respect of their inferiors?

When our armies are disbanded we are bound to keep alive the military spirit which now pervades us. Even the universal peace societies will protest against our relapsing into our old ridiculous military system.

State military organizations will have to be established, but we must not let the information which is to sustain them upon a respectable footing die out with the generation which participated in the present war and learned all they knew from slow and rough experience.

We are called upon to do something for those who are to follow us, and that something is the establishment of military schools. West Point may suffice to supply the standing army, but, even at this very time, many a young soldier undergoing the rough experience of war had hardly left his mother's side when Sumter and Bull Run astounded his boyish faculties.

Suppose that, as is the earnest hope of every true patriot, the war should close sooner, in a few months, and that then, after a respite of five or ten years, a foreign war should open upon us. The subordinate officers of the army which we would then have to call into existence would be drawn from the generation now thumbing its spelling books.

With the experience of this war before us, should we not provide for such exigencies of the future?

As these present boys and future officers relinquished their civil pursuits to take up the sword for the defense of their country's honor, would they not thank the older generation which had with such fore-thought prepared them for their new positions, and enabled them to enter with confidence upon their novel duties, and to command the respect of their inferiors?

When our armies are disbanded we are bound to keep alive the military spirit which now pervades us. Even the universal peace societies will protest against our relapsing into our old ridiculous military system.

State military organizations will have to be established, but we must not let the information which is to sustain them upon a respectable footing die out with the generation which participated in the present war and learned all they knew from slow and rough experience.

We are called upon to do something for those who are to follow us, and that something is the establishment of military schools. West Point may suffice to supply the standing army, but, even at this very time, many a young soldier undergoing the rough experience of war had hardly left his mother's side when Sumter and Bull Run astounded his boyish faculties.

Suppose that, as is the earnest hope of every true patriot, the war should close sooner, in a few months, and that then, after a respite of five or ten years, a foreign war should open upon us. The subordinate officers of the army which we would then have to call into existence would be drawn from the generation now thumbing its spelling books.

With the experience of this war before us, should we not provide for such exigencies of the future?

As these present boys and future officers relinquished their civil pursuits to take up the sword for the defense of their country's honor, would they not thank the older generation which had with such fore-thought prepared them for their new positions, and enabled them to enter with confidence upon their novel duties, and to command the respect of their inferiors?

When our armies are disbanded we are bound to keep alive the military spirit which now pervades us. Even the universal peace societies will protest against our relapsing into our old ridiculous military system.

State military organizations will have to be established, but we must not let the information which is to sustain them upon a respectable footing die out with the generation which participated in the present war and learned all they knew from slow and rough experience.

We are called upon to do something for those who are to follow us, and that something is the establishment of military schools. West Point may suffice to supply the standing army, but, even at this very time, many a young soldier undergoing the rough experience of war had hardly left his mother's side when Sumter and Bull Run astounded his boyish faculties.

Suppose that, as is the earnest hope of every true patriot, the war should close sooner, in a few months, and that then, after a respite of five or ten years, a foreign war should open upon us. The subordinate officers of the army which we would then have to call into existence would be drawn from the generation now thumbing its spelling books.

With the experience of this war before us, should we not provide for such exigencies of the future?

As these present boys and future officers relinquished their civil pursuits to take up the sword for the defense of their country's honor, would they not thank the older generation which had with such fore-thought prepared them for their new positions, and enabled them to enter with confidence upon their novel duties, and to command the respect of their inferiors?

When our armies are disbanded we are bound to keep alive the military spirit which now pervades us. Even the universal peace societies will protest against our relapsing into our old ridiculous military system.

State military organizations will have to be established, but we must not let the information which is to sustain them upon a respectable footing die out with the generation which participated in the present war and learned all they knew from slow and rough experience.

We are called upon to do something for those who are to follow us, and that something is the establishment of military schools. West Point may suffice to supply the standing army, but, even at this very time, many a young soldier undergoing the rough experience of war had hardly left his mother's side when Sumter and Bull Run astounded his boyish faculties.

Suppose that, as is the earnest hope of every true patriot, the war should close sooner, in a few months, and that then, after a respite of five or ten years, a foreign war should open upon us. The subordinate officers of the army which we would then have to call into existence would be drawn from the generation now thumbing its spelling books.

With the experience of this war before us, should we not provide for such exigencies of the future?

As these present boys and future officers relinquished their civil pursuits to take up the sword for the defense of their country's honor, would they not thank the older generation which had with such fore-thought prepared them for their new positions, and enabled them to enter with confidence upon their novel duties, and to command the respect of their inferiors?

When our armies are disbanded we are bound to keep alive the military spirit which now pervades us. Even the universal peace societies will protest against our relapsing into our old ridiculous military system.

State military organizations will have to be established, but we must not let the information which is to sustain them upon a respectable footing die out with the generation which participated in the present war and learned all they knew from slow and rough experience.

We are called upon to do something for those who are to follow us, and that something is the establishment of military schools. West Point may suffice to supply the standing army, but, even at this very time, many a young soldier undergoing the rough experience of war had hardly left his mother's side when Sumter and Bull Run astounded his boyish faculties.

Suppose that, as is the earnest hope of every true patriot, the war should close sooner, in a few months, and that then, after a respite of five or ten years, a foreign war should open upon us. The subordinate officers of the army which we would then have to call into existence would be drawn from the generation now thumbing its spelling books.

With the experience of this war before us, should we not provide for such exigencies of the future?

As these present boys and future officers relinquished their civil pursuits to take up the sword for the defense of their country's honor, would they not thank the older generation which had with such fore-thought prepared them for their new positions, and enabled them to enter with confidence upon their novel duties, and to command the respect of their inferiors?

When our armies are disbanded we are bound to keep alive the military spirit which now pervades us. Even the universal peace societies will protest against our relapsing into our old ridiculous military system.

State military organizations will have to be established, but we must not let the information which is to sustain them upon a respectable footing die out with the generation which participated in the present war and learned all they knew from slow and rough experience.

We are called upon to do something for those who are to follow us, and that something is the establishment of military schools. West Point may suffice to supply the standing army, but, even at this very time, many a young soldier undergoing the rough experience of war had hardly left his mother's side when Sumter and Bull Run astounded his boyish faculties.

Suppose that, as is the earnest hope of every true patriot, the war should close sooner, in a few months, and that then, after a respite of five or ten years, a foreign war should open upon us. The subordinate officers of the army which we would then have to call into existence would be drawn from the generation now thumbing its spelling books.

With the experience of this war before us, should we not provide for such exigencies of the future?

As these present boys and future officers relinquished their civil pursuits to take up the sword for the defense of their country's honor, would they not thank the older generation which had with such fore-thought prepared them for their new positions, and enabled them to enter with confidence upon their novel duties, and to command the respect of their inferiors?

When our armies are disbanded we are bound to keep alive the military spirit which now pervades us. Even the universal peace societies will protest against our relapsing into our old ridiculous military system.

State military organizations will have to be established, but we must not let the information which is to sustain them upon a respectable footing die out with the generation which participated in the present war and learned all they knew from slow and rough experience.

We are called upon to do something for those who are to follow us, and that something is the establishment of military schools. West Point may suffice to supply the standing army, but, even at this very time, many a young soldier undergoing the rough experience of war had hardly left his mother's side when Sumter and Bull Run astounded his boyish faculties.

Suppose that, as is the earnest hope of every true patriot, the war should close sooner, in a few months, and that then, after a respite of five or ten years, a foreign war should open upon us. The subordinate officers of the army which we would then have to call into existence would be drawn from the generation now thumbing its spelling books.

With the experience of this war before us, should we not provide for such exigencies of the future?

As these present boys and future officers relinquished their civil pursuits to take up the sword for the defense of their country's honor, would they not thank the older generation which had with such fore-thought prepared them for their new positions, and enabled them to enter with confidence upon their novel duties, and to command the respect of their inferiors?

When our armies are disbanded we are bound to keep alive the military spirit which now pervades us. Even the universal peace societies will protest against our relapsing into our old ridiculous military system.

State military organizations will have to be established, but we must not let the information which is to sustain them upon a respectable footing die out with the generation which participated in the present war and learned all they knew from slow and rough experience.

We are called upon to do something for those who are to follow us, and that something is the establishment of military schools. West Point may suffice to supply the standing army, but, even at this very time, many a young soldier undergoing the rough experience of war had hardly left his mother's side when Sumter and Bull Run astounded his boyish faculties.

Suppose that, as is the earnest hope of every true patriot, the war should close sooner, in a few months, and that then, after a respite of five or ten years, a foreign war should open upon us. The subordinate officers of the army which we would then have to call into existence would be drawn from the generation now thumbing its spelling books.

With the experience of this war before us, should we not provide for such exigencies of the future?

As these present boys and future officers relinquished their civil pursuits to take up the sword for the defense of their country's honor, would they not thank the older generation which had with such fore-thought prepared them for their new positions, and enabled them to enter with confidence upon their novel duties, and to command the respect of their inferiors?

When our armies are disbanded we are bound to keep alive the military spirit which now pervades us. Even the universal peace societies will protest against our relapsing into our old ridiculous military system.

State military organizations will have to be established, but we must not let the information which is to sustain them upon a respectable footing die out with the generation which participated in the present war and learned all they knew from slow and rough experience.

